BRIDGE INN

Durham

The Bridge Story

The Bridge was established in 1864. The land lady at the time Margaret Palmer named the pub after the 100ft granite railway viaduct built to service the North Eastern Railway built by T E Harrison .The inn was built to house the builders of the mammoth arches.

In 1879 Lewis Henry Blake took over the pub at a time when it was becoming popular with members of the Durham Miners Association and it became a main stay for the members on the way to the miners hall.

From 1897 to 1926 Edwin Alfred Oliver managed the pub for W.B Reid & Co LTD. Between 1914 and 1919 he enlisted in the army to fight in the first world war and left the pub in the hands of his wife Sophia.

Durham was growing fast and was noted for A huge increase in retail and wholesale trading .John Watson a member of the Durham chamber of trade took over the pub in 1951 his friends and fellow traders used the pub for informal business meetings over a tippie or two. Despite a fire in 1964 which nearly saw the end of the Bridge it continues to strengthen its reputation for serving fine ales and good food
